

Austin Whitehead is a Liberty Wells resident and graduate student in city + metropolitan planning at the University of Utah. Originally from North Carolina, he moved to Salt Lake City in 2018 for access to hiking, biking, and skiing, but also for the bikeable neighborhoods, lovely parks, and strong sense of community. He believes in the power of public lands to bring people together and wants to work to make Salt Lake's shared spaces better for everyone. You will find him most days biking around the city, reading in the park, or running in the foothills.